Decibali (aut Deceballi, auctor enim non satis accurate describere solet) nomen non mirandum in cohorte Aelia Dacorum. [Sero video eandem me iam supra dedisse n. 539.]

870a Willoford. There is also a large stone built up in the court wall, upon which there may possibly be an inscription; but the side on which it must be, if at all, is entirely covered.

Horsley p. 253. Adscripsi, ut denuo indagetur.

870b Burdoswald. There is another altar built up in the Milk-house, of which the inscription is quite worn out.

870c I found at Underhaugh . . . a broken altar with a mutilated inscription, made use of to set the bars of the fire place upon, and for what is called in that country a hud-stone.
